Marriage of Min.

There is a widespread idea that contanguin our mious produce either defective offspring or nonat all. When a marriage between consinals spok en of, sterility or a deaf mute idlotte or deformed progeny is predicted, and examples are always at and to cite in support of the prophery. AS SOLE AGENTS FOR SATISFACTION TO-

Does this opinion rest upon positive and well authenticated facts or sit erroneous? This is a question that was examined a low years ago by Mr. G. H. Darwir, who after a profound study of the subject, came to the conclusion that, in the present state of science, there is nothing to justify the common prejudice that exists against the market. Orders and consignments solicited; they will rethe common preparate the Lexists against the mar-riage of near kin. Mars recently, the subject has been further examined by Mr. A. H. Huth, who has just published an exhaustice work unou it, in which he arrives at the same conclusions that Mr. Darwin did.

Mr. Huth thinks that consanguinity of itself.

Mr. Darwin did.

Mr. Huth thinks that consanguinity of itself plays no particular role in the nuison or individuals of the same stock. In the descendants it increases the tendencies common to the two progenitors. By reason of their relationship, the closer this is and the closer the relationship of the ancestors, the greater is the tendency of the descendants to exhibit the same dispositions. If these are good, consanguincons nuisons will be advantageous, in that they will fortify and intensify them. If, on the contart, they are bad, such unions should be avoided in order to prevent a reenforcement of nutwo able tendencies which should be suppressed. But the case is identical where it is a question of unrelated persons. No reasonable person would arge two neuropathic individuals of different family to unite because he knows that the neurosis has every chance to become intense in the descendants. On the contarty, a union believen consinguineous individuals equally healthy and well favored, ought to be encouraged.

What may be urged against marriage of near kin is the facility with which unfavorable tendencies are transmitted, and the relative rarity of the circumstances in which such marriage; can really be advised. But, this admitted and explained, consanguinity of itself presents no inconvenience, especially if we consider how remote, by reason of the existing laws upon marriage, is the degree of consanguinity between ladividuals expalse of uniting legitimately.

Upon the whose, consanguinity, accumulates and intensifies tendencies. If these are bad, the marriage of near kin should be avoided; if good, it may be favored. But as, unfortunately, the unfavorable ten lencies are more easily and frequently transmitted, tecause they are the ones that are established with the most facility, there is oftener more reason for avoiding than seeking such unions. Upon the whole, Mr. Huth concludes

First, his shirt collar is cut away sufficiently to allow the guillotine-knife to fall upon his berneck; then he is fastened with a cord starting from the shoulders and connecting with another cord that binds the two wrists a third cord goes from the wrist to the knees, where it is joined to another cord airc ady passed around the legs.

Thus strapped, the culprit is obliged to march as an ght as an 1, with his heat thrown back. When the preparations are ended the procession starts for the guillotine, the prisoner being supported by two of the headsman's aid-and accompanied by the executioner, the chaptain and the other officials. The huge prison doors are thrown open and the first object the condemned man sees is the black trapeziform knife, which, contrary to the general impression, is not concealed from his gaze. The distance from the door to the guillotine is scarcely twenty steps, and as soon as the criminal reaches the swinging board the chaptain quits him, the executioner reizes him and pushes him on the boxade. Pan Panis a cleak and a third; the fail of the knife, the heavy sound of the head falling into the bran box. The movements are almost simultaneous. The knife falls. The criminal disappears.
